INTRODUCTION

The Liverpool Museum was founded in 1851 by a bequest to the city of the 13th Earl of Derby's huge collection of bird and mammal specimens, but it appears that no herpetological material originated from this source; the oldest item in the present collections being a chameleon acquired in October 1851. Contemporary stockbooks illustrate how, during the next 60 years, the Museum accumulated, by gift and purchase, an important worldwide representation of spirit-preserved amphibians and reptiles. The culmination of this endeavour was an expedition to the Socotra Archipelago, undertaken during 1898-99 in conjunction with the British Museum (Natural History); one of the major participants being H.O. Forbes, then Director of the Liverpool Museum. The very valuable collection of reptiles yielded by this venture was divided equally between the two collaborating institutions.

Subsequently, following the retirement of Forbes and then the First World War, interest in the spirit-preserved collections at Liverpool began to wane; little was added and "curation" appears to have been limited to periodically discarding specimens which had deteriorated, presumably as a result of desiccation, to a point where they were considered to be of no further use. A great deal of important material was lost as a result of such negligence, particularly during the 1920s. The Liverpool Museum's share of the Socotran collection, for example, once comprised 179 lizards and snakes, amongst which were 63 type specimens, but only 75 of these (including 16 types) have survived to the present day.

It was not until the late 1950s that this long period of neglect was finally brought to an end by the then Keeper of Vertebrate Zoology, R. Wagstaffe, who began, with considerable success, to actively solicit gifts of spirit-preserved material from other institutions and from individual collectors in the field. His initiative was rewarded by numerous important donations, the most significant of which include the large collections of East African snakes acquired from J.R.F. Mills and C.R.S. Pitman during the period 1957-62, and the British reptiles contributed by I. Prestt in 1963. Wagstaffe himself led an expedition to northern Greece in 1961, which obtained further amphibian and reptile specimens for the Liverpool Museum.

Despite this resurgence of interest in spirit-preserved vertebrate collections, such material continued to be housed in inaccessible and environmentally unsatisfactory conditions until as late as 1985, when a new temperature-controlled store was built, together with an adjoining laboratory designed to meet all health and safety standards for the preparation and subsequent handling of spirit specimens. Shortly afterwards, opportunities for M.J. Largen to undertake field work in Africa, during 1986 and again in 1990, led to the acquisition of two outstandingly important collections of amphibians from, respectively, Ethiopia and Congo Brazzaville.

Previous publications based entirely or to a considerable extent upon herpetological material housed in the Liverpool Museum are those of Boulenger (1899, 1903), Prestt (1971), Largen & Drewes (1989), Largen (1991a, 1991b, 1995, 1997) and Largen & Dowsett-Lemaire (1991). In the present catalogue, taxonomy and nomenclature generally follow the most recent and comprehensive systematic reviews, especially those of Cogger (1996), Duellman (1993), Frost (1985), King & Burke (1989), Peters & Donoso-Barros (1986), Peters & Orejas-Miranda (1986), Welch (1982, 1983, 1988), Welch et al. (1990), and Wright & Wright (1957). All specimens have been re-examined, previous identifications confirmed or corrected, and nomenclature updated where necessary. It must be stressed, however, that we have rather greater confidence in some determinations than in others. Consequently, researchers to whom this information is of interest would be well advised not to use this catalogue as a primary data source, but always to make or request a critical reappraisal of the material in question.

With few exceptions, localities of origin are cited as recorded by the collectors and little attempt has been made to interpret or amend this information. This is particularly evident in the case of J.R.F. Mills' numerous East African reptiles. John Mills worked as a Ranger for the Uganda Game and Fisheries Department until December 1962, was based at Mbarara, and made extensive use of his staff of Game Guards for the collection and preparation of small vertebrates, during the course of their protracted, bicycle-mounted patrols. The labels that they wrote are still attached to their specimens and indicate that, like many Africans, these collectors tended to spell phonetically, often producing several different notations for what is clearly a single locality. It would be presumptuous to claim that any one of these spellings is necessarily more correct than another, but some degree of standardisation is obviously desirable and it is hoped that, in due course, this will be achieved by the preparation of a gazetteer of geographical co-ordinates identifying the origin of all the Liverpool Museum herpetological material.
